The Nichols house is a replete instance of the diffusion of Californian design ideals in the postwar decade, the work that brought architect Lloyd Greer's career to its culmination, and the starting point for the careers of several leading Valdosta architects of the next generation.

- Alfred Willis

Dr. Willis earned degrees from the University of Chicago, Columbia University, Université Libre de Bruxelles, and Clemson University. His teaching and research experience spans over 30 years at multiple institutions. Dr. Willis currently works as a consultant.
